How the two Gulf Wars have shaped the world we live in today

A talk with
Major General Patrick Cordingley
OBE DSO FRGS

The first Gulf War, although a massive and successful conventional war, was thought by the West to be unfinished business. This led to the second disastrous intervention in the Middle East in 2003 and a chain reaction of events which have affected us all today. Could it have been avoided and what will happen next?

Major General Cordingley is a retired British Army officer who commanded the 2nd Division.
